

Kevin's Puzzle of the Week

Souvenir Collection

Whenever I go somewhere, I bring a little something extra back home.

Several years ago, I traveled to the Rubber Capital of the World, and brought back a cold-weather coat. I picked up some casual pants at the site of the 2014 Olympics. When I visited the largest city in India, I came home with a brand new buckler, and I scored a woodcutting tool from the City of Light. A Mediterranean island nation provided me with a dish wrapped in corn husks, and I washed it down with some carbonated mineral water I picked up in South Dakota's capital city. When I visited Norway's capital, I acquired several weaving machines, but they don't compare to the mustelid I bought in a country with a dragon on its flag. I traveled to the most densely-populated country in Asia and flew home with a flowering plant. I made sure to enjoy some ice cream with toppings during my visit to the country that was formerly the largest in Africa. During a visit to a former Yugoslavian nation, I got a waterproof jacket, and I started a wind farm with the device I picked up in a nation ruled by a sultan. Finally, I visited an Iberian country and returned home with some keyboard instruments.
