

Kevin's Puzzle of the Week

Cartoon Cliches

Do you ever feel like Disney movies just keep using the same characters over and over?

It gives me entertainment when a scary one-handed man has a goofy sidekick.

People always talk about how cool a friend would be, and then they make one, as if by magic.

It is inevitable that every rogue will meet someone that they would call a dynamite gal.

Whenever deals between the main character and the villain occur, Su laughs at them, but I've seen it all before.

In the current kick that I'm on, there's always a pair of comic relief characters with a cool new motto.

There usually is a belauded figure who everybody expects to be perfect and full of flowers at all times.

The main character often ends up joining a gang of big-hearted scoundrels who live right on the street.

I don't want to watch one more movie where the title character gets lost and has to be found. I would rather go to the dentist.

I don't know what makes some daft inker bellow, "Let's have the side character get jealous and betray the heroes!"

When I asked her for a pun, Zelda pointed to The Gift of the Magi, saying "Hair today; gone tomorrow."

The word 'duo' doesn't apply to witches - they are always found in groups of three.

I keep on going to movies where children are kidnapped and their father has to travel across the country to rescue them.

As well, I even see characters who die within the first ten minutes of the movie to cause the whole journey of the heroes.